Márta Barbarics, PhD

Dr. Márta Barbarics is a senior lecturer at Eötvös Loránd University, where she teaches English language pedagogy and explores how learning can be made more engaging through creativity and play. Her PhD research focused on alternative assessment methods and how gamification can make evaluation more meaningful for students. Márta has taught in Hungary and internationally, trained teachers on topics from classroom motivation to democratic education, and helped organize projects like Math on the Street, which brings mathematics to life in public spaces. She's passionate about rethinking what teaching and learning can look like when curiosity, empathy, and fun take center stage.
